This four-hour experience will present a number of perspectives on how race, ethnicity and social class may impact our perceptions, actions and belief system. An overview of cultural influences and patterns will be presented after which participants will be encouraged to develop a personal socialization map that can be compared with others. The complexity of these influences often becomes apparent as we examine personal experience against models of understanding ourselves in the context of culture.

This fundamental examination of one's self is essential to dissecting how we view and interpret others. Only through a culturally informed lens can we effectively engage people and provide services that are well received and relevant in today's evolving climate.
